TRAINMEN HOLD BACK

As Do Vermont Veterinarians Wanted for U. S. Service.

Three more colored registrants are to be called from Vermont. The call order is expected any day. Thus far only two men have self-inducted in response to the call for trainmen; one of these is from Newport, while the other is M. H. Kelley of Barre. No veterinarians have as yet applied for self-induction, and unless they do within a few days, three will be called from the state.

The report which was printed in the Boston papers last week stating that Vermont's quota of the 800,000 to be called will be 2,354 has set many people to speculating. Some interpret it to mean that 2,354 more are to be called, but the information at the adjutant-general's office is that the calls have already been made. It is the call which was announced in January, although not yet fixed by Congress. Of the 2,354, approximately 1,500 have already gone into service.

Eggs which have been put down in waterglass are apt to break when boiled; this is due to the solution rendering the shell tight. Puncture one end of the shell with a needle and it will not crack.

The war has been the means of women entering occupations which but a few years ago would have been thought impossible. To-day the demand for women chemists is overwhelming and there are not enough women skilled in that work to fill the places. This will also bring about a greater demand for instruction in chemistry in college courses.

James White, a blacksmith, measured his barn against the strength of State's Attorney Earle R. Davis in the latter's law office Saturday evening, and when an ejectment act which followed the lawyer's invitation to leave the premises had ended, the smith knew more about the bag of tricks which every ex-schoolmaster carries. The state's attorney used to wield the hickory over one of the toughest schools in Vermont, and the knowledge gained in that atmosphere served him in good stead when it came to ejecting White. MONTPELIER

Ford Turned Over on Party, but They Escaped Injury.

W. H. Jeffrey, secretary of the board of charities and probation, is congratulating himself upon escaping injury. He left Saturday afternoon for his home, in his new Ford, which was in charge of a chauffeur, while Milo Jeffrey and a friend were accompanying Mr. Jeffrey to East Burke. All went nicely until they reached the height of land near Joseph Buzell's house. They were going slowly when something apparently happened to the running gear, for the machine suddenly went crosswise of the road, turning turtle. One of Mr. Buzell's folks saw the accident and rushed to the place.

One of the occupants was able to get from under the machine, which was raised up and the others were helped out. The machine was tipped right side up and repair men were called. The machine was taken to Montpelier, where it was found that hardly any damage had been done. Minor repairs to the steering gear were made, and the party went to East Burke.

All who have been attending the night trade schools in Burlington, Proctor, St. Johnsbury and Rutland have been taken out of these, and those who have qualified have been sent to the army by self-induction, while the others are going into the day school at the University of Vermont, that opens May 17.
